Eco-friendly Solutions for a Better World

Robert Wilder

Encinitas, California

Amazingly in one short year, Dr. Rob Wilder created the first Clean Energy Index (ECO), advancing green energy as a response to global warming. He organized the Hydrogen Fuel Cell Institute as a non-profit 501c3 organization dedicated to environmental education. Additionally, Robert has proposed numerous innovative solutions for conserving coasts and oceans.

In the local community, Rob has stood out as a clear community leader. He ran for the City Council, advancing a platform of environmental stewardship. He has also worked with community-based restoration programs, here and around the nation.

Love for the environment and a selfless desire to make the world a better place motivates Robert to action. In addition to his advocacy and community work, he's now building a "green" demonstration house as well, to show our community ways to build more eco-friendly homes.

Robert has undertaken environmental advocacy and problem solving, and all beyond the demands of his regular job. He is tireless in his efforts, generating fantastic support locally and beyond for greening the Earth and preserving our environment.
